

BIO - SELINA BLACK

Selina is a small town Swiss girl from Kuesnacht with Italian roots. Today, she lives in vibrant London, where she works as a screen-actress and singer-songwriter.

After studying vocals at ICMP in Kilburn and working as a singer-songwriter at VME Records, Selina trained as an actress at the Academy of Media, Film & TV and continues to regularly train at The Actors Centre.

With a passion for Human Rights, animals and the environment, and bilingual in English and German, Selina especially loves being the face and voice of social, vegan and eco-friendly undertakings. Her biggest motivation is to help create a better and kinder world for everyone.

In her downtime, she practices yoga and goes for extensive swims which remind her of her childhood at Lake Zurich. Fun fact - she's also a devoted bunny mum!

Recently, Selina had the pleasure of playing a Human Rights activist in Mostofa Farooki's 'Saturday Afternoon'. Furthermore, she wrote the lyrics to her favourite wildlife photographer Chris Schmid's video 'Soul of the Pantanal'.

More information can be found on Spotlight, IMDb or directly via email: contact@selinablack.com